Gartner predicts that more than 50% of enterprises will have more than four diverse automation technologies within their IT management portfolios, up from less than 20% in 2014.

The total number of vendors of IaaS will increase by 50%, but 20% of the current vendors will exit the market.

By 2017, 75% of organizations will have a bimodal capability, up to 2017. 60% will have a strategy for cost reduction and greater agility.

By 2018, 70% of IT teams will have a strategy to prevent data breaches from public clouds, driven primarily by the expectation of increased security risks.

Through 2019, 30% of organizations will support a unified view of connected devices, enabling IT teams to provide single sign-on (SSO) and context-aware services to over 26 billion connected devices.

By 2019, 80% of IT teams will have a strategy to prevent data breaches from public clouds, driven primarily by the expectation of increased security risks.

By 2020, 50% of the CIOs that have not transformed their capabilities will be displaced from the digital leadership team.

At least 60% of enterprises running cloud services will experience service outages, driven primarily by the expectation of increased security risks.

The Operating Costs of Enterprise Data Centers will be reduced by 30%.